

Early stage startups: apply for one of 10 slots to pitch to investors at our Investor unPanel on April 3.

It's a Catch-22, just like getting ones first job: How does a young company get investor feedback before they are ready to get in front of investors?

They come to the TechSandBox unPanel.

We have gathered a panel of investors who will provide suggestions, guidance and questions to help startups understand what they need to do in order to get in front of investors.

Do you need a prototype? How finished? Does interest need to be a sale? Or an LoI? Or a user (even nonpaying)? Where do you spend your time and meager resources to advance far enough to get a first official meeting and the ultimate 'gold ring': funding!

And, before we begin, there'll be a seminar on the world of VCs and Angels.

So, sign up for one of the best seminars around. Then, either pitch or listen to the feedback and guidance being provided.

Instructions

Fill out the application by March 15 along with $55 fee which is also admissions for one person. You will be notified by March 22 if you've been selected. We will pick 10 early stage companies.

Qualifications

Open to tech or life science product or services startups of any stage that are less than $1M in revenue. A founder or company executive must enter and be the presenter.

Equal points are given for the pitch, team, knowing the market, having or knowing how to get customers, knowing how to make money (model), and other accomplishments and risks. Revenue or funding is only a small consideration.

Lunch and networking follow.
